I.   INTRODUCTION

Social media can be described as websites and apps that allow users to generate and distribute content or to engage in social networks. These pages offer a forum for debate on topics that has gone unnoticed in today's society. It is one of digital mass media most popular and preferred forms, with many functionality and social aspects. On the same platform, it has many benefits, such as talking, messaging, exchanging images, exchanging voice messages, easy writing, interacting with worldwide, direct communication [1]. It is also the world's cheapest rapid access, so it is very important for all age groups of people. Internet usage in all parts of the world is rising with each day now because of high rates. Of all age ranges, the majority of young people switch easily from electronic media, such as viewers and listeners, to social networks.

The youth rate of a day is now going to move very much into social networks, so its effect is a lot on youth life. In all age groups, the majority of young people are rapidly moving from digital media, such as viewers and listeners, to social media. Youth rates are very much about moving to social media, because they have a lot of impact on youth [2]. This craze for social networks has created a host of questions about its effect on society, while it is consented that impact of social media the lifestyles of individuals and that it is a continuing process to identify the essence of this effect on young people throughout every community and nation [3].

This social media activity has caused a lot of problems with its impact on society, and it is stated that social networking affects the way people live and that it is a current process to discover the essence of these effects in all societies and especially on young people. This research is intended to validate the effect of social media on skills development. The basic purpose of this research is to consider the understanding and utility of social media sites among young people [3]. Social Networking is widely used in the modern age, ideally among the young people. It is reported that 89 percent of users between the ages of 16 to 27 have access to the internet, according to the recent stats. The Networking Site is a web-based program that enables the user to communicate and build a personal website with people of their choosing. This website helps the user to perform different activities, such as posting, messaging, uploading pictures and videos, etc. Most of today's young people waste their time browsing updates on social networks, texting, and most commonly looking for movies. Social sites were originally designed to communicate with consumers, clients and colleagues in the business environment. But this has now been lengthened to friends and relatives. This is most often used by individuals because of its easy accessibility around the globe [4].

While the operations have had a huge impact on society, especially on young people, social networking has been so popular over time that several scientists have become interested in studying the development of social sites and their advantages and disadvantages for society. Internet platforms have received benefits in several domains, while some are becoming difficult to achieve [5]. It has been noted that social media has negatively impacted the contact abilities of young people. It is clear that different media might be a significant component of business marketing communication for people around the globe. The main supporter of daily interacting with friends, relatives and acquaintances became internet sites. It switches relationships and decreases the degree of inter-personal contact. Sometimes, some of them are 'ttyl' for 'speak to you later',' gr8' instead of 'great' in modern vernacular for calls, which in turn kill the syntax and the slang.

II.   DISCUSSION

Most young people have switched from electronic platforms such as television, radio, and social media these days. For contact, they do not need to see their mates face to face. As a result of the rise of social media in conversation, young people have insignificantly changed from a mass to a virtual community. Social media has given them the ability, as per young people, to withdraw from the realm of reality and to articulate themselves elsewhere. Because of this, when lonely, they say they are or play online rather than converse with their peers and relatives. Over time, young people have adopted this behaviour and believe their lives will be boring without social networks [6].

Social networks are a big development among young people, but they have a huge impact on their wellbeing. It has been noted that social media addiction contributes to eye pressure and lack of sleep. Research says that it is essential for healthy overall health to have a meaningful link with people. "Online bullying" and "Facebook anxiety" are faced by most kids in the 8-15 age range. Social media has also been found to cause more depression and less well-being among teens [6]. 41 percent of American academics use social media to communicate with learners, according to 2017 data. Students favour e-learning over class-based training these days. YouTube has since gained more attention for studies by learners. Platforms such as Coursera and Nationwide Technology Enhanced Curriculum Platform offer students with the ability to select their area of interest and discover more. There are more negatives than the positives of using social networks. Students wind up losing time after investing more time browsing than studying. The false degree, which is a big threat, is provided by several fraud organizations. Children have inculpated the practice of using the same when writing exams and assessments using slang when talking online.

The research reflects on the influence of social media on teenagers. In order to rule the king, technology is seen as the king and man must be intelligent. It is necessary to inform young people about the use of social networks to enhance their professional and personal growth. Technology has assisted in getting human flesh and feelings into our bodies. As it has shaped them, the bulk of young people are moving from television to social media. Social networking shapes the behaviours of young people and helps them create a worldwide network. Social networking makes it possible to create a bond with someone by sharing their interests and despises, which can be accomplished quickly. By tweeting, posting images and videos with their peers, they are able to communicate with others and the knowledge can be forwarded on quickly at a reduced rate. A forum for addressing any pressing relevant problems is created by social networking. Social media is a medium in which they are able to communicate with their friends their opinions and emotions [7].

When young adults get older, they get guidance for the challenges of their lives as they are in a bind as to what should be achieved. Help consumers to collaborate information about the activities to be delivered. Bookings can be reserved directly for a cinema screening, a hotel and airline and rail tickets for both local and international travel. When the young are more mindful of democracy, social networking has promoted political reform [7]. Social media facilitates immoral videos, discussions, photographs that build a conflict of view for them. The bond among states is undermined by such postings. They fell victim of a cyber-harassment when young people are inexperienced. This impacts young people's mental and physical health and contributes to suicide [8].

There are risks of exploitation of personal data by a third party and there is a lack of anonymity on social networking platforms. Face to face contact is being decreased due to the use of social media. It is circulating misleading rumours and inaccurate evidence. To commit offences, perpetrators use social media. It facilitates critical and existence amateur medical therapy [8]. Instead of any productive ambitions, the new youngsters are spending more of their time on social media. From the chi - squared test, it is known that there is a connection between hours wasted on communication and the act of adolescence. They are shifted away from their profession and personal growth. By exchanging images and chatting excessively, young people are addicted to the internet [9].

As parents are overwhelmed with their daily operations affairs, they are still unable to conserve their children's attention. Social media allows today's young people to get rid of their frustration. Faulty religious knowledge on social networks will spoil the reputation of countries by harming young people. Our future cornerstone of our country is youth. They assume and ruin the words posted by leaders. Any of the evidence posted on social media aims to enhance the awareness of young people. Social media platform aims to increase the youth's professional standard. There is a networking connection and a shortage of reasoning skills. The Internet allows young people to understand the social ideals of life [9]. Social networking helps you improve social skills and make plenty of friends. Youths engage in cyber bullying that adds to the impacted party's isolation and suicidal feelings.

III. CONCLUSION & IMPLICATION

This research was undertaken specifically to test the influence of networks on young people. It is known that because of restless nights, they are losing the valuable time which often adds to health concerns. Cultural and moral ideals must be taken into consideration when sharing material on social networks and do not harm others. It is important to educate young people to evaluate the data and to be able to judge the knowledge that pollutes our principles that will definitely benefit our nation, the businesses with a sense of grandeur in existence. Younger folks cannot supply social media with their private details, since third parties may abuse it. Minimize the negative social media impact when speaking. Schools and administrators should ensure what the kids do in social networks to protect the new generation.
